

Imagination

He had traveled
Many millions of miles
Through the rays of light
That brought the news of stars!
Every day he became more curious
About those glittering mass
And then he would feel sleepy
On his mother's laps
And sooner the stars started visiting him
And wonders flooded in into him with all the rush!

He would speak to a star
And would be closer to another
For the stars loved him,
Kindhearted and brighter!
They came to kiss him
And offered him to join them, with a smile
They're in the move in the eternity of time,
But took a break to meet him for a while,
And he became attached to them
As we ordinary, do in a noisy and crowded Mall!

Many nights passed silently
As they are accustomed to
He woke up in bed every morning early
And was greeted to be prepared to go.
He had to learn to write and to speak
And then to humanly think!
And the learned creatures in the school
Had little time to link
The stars and the like,
As the burden of routines would remind and obediently blink!

But this child was different
And the curiosity drove him to stall
And perhaps, he took among us
The most difficult of the call!
Neighbors felt that he spent his time
In the search of new,
Though curiosity in uncertainty
Sustains in only a few.
There are more to learn than what is seen
In the beauty of a drop of dew!
